SECTION I

THE COMING OF ADRIAN BLOCK

[Adrian Block and his Dutch crew explored the southern coast of New England in 1614, just 300 years ago. Fisher's Island was named for one of his crew, and Block Island for the commander of the expedition himself. Block was sent out in the ship Tiger from Hoorn, Holland, (from which Cape Horn was named), in 1613 by the Dutch East India Company, whose colors are displayed in this section. The Tiger was burned, and he built at New Amsterdam the Ourust or Restless, 44 feet in length, one of the first vessels—if not the first—built by white men in America. Block probably dropped anchor in Stonington harbor; at any rate he sailed into the Pawcatuck river, a fact that makes it fitting that his voyage should be commemorated by Pawcatuck in the parade.]

SECTION II

THE PEQUOT WAR

[In 1637 the Pequots, a warlike tribe that had driven the milder Niantics from what is now southeastern Connecticut and southwestern Rhode Island, was practically annihilated near the present site of Mystic by a Colonial force under Captain John Mason, to whom Mason's Island was given for this service. Some 700 Indians perished in the battle, while the English loss was insignificant.]

SECTION III

THE SETTLEMENT OF THE TOWN

[The first white settler within the limits of the town was William Chesebrough, who came from Rehoboth in Plymouth Colony in 1649 and built a house at Wequetequock. Thomas Stanton, who first landed in Virginia, came to Pawcatuck in 1650 and established a trading post on the shore of the river; later he was interpreter general of the New England Colonies. Thomas Miner, who had lived in Charlestown, Hingham and New London, settled at Wequetequock in 1652 and afterward moved to Quiambaug. Walter Palmer, the first of the founders of the town to emigrate to America, came to Wequetequock from Rehoboth in 1653, purchased Thomas Miner's house and acquired the land on the east side of the cove. Captain George Denison, famous as an Indian fighter, settled near Mystic in 1654, and Captain John Gallup and Robert Park established themselves in that part of the town in the same year. Thomas Wheeler came from Lynn in 1667 and settled in the northern section of the town.]

SECTION IV

KING PHILIP'S WAR

[King Philip, younger son of Massasoit and chief of the Wampanoag Indians, was for some years a friend of the English, but, angered by their encroachments, he formed a confederation of tribes (including the Narragansetts) against them. In 1675 war broke out. The Indians destroyed 13 towns and killed 600 colonists. In December of that year, Massachusetts, Plymouth and Connecticut troops to the number of 1,000 invaded the Great Swamp in South Kingstown, R. I., burned the Narragansett fort and killed 600 warriors and 1,000 women and children; the English loss was 30 or 40 slain. The Connecticut troops in this campaign rendezvoused at Stonington. Canonchet, chief of the Narragansetts, has been called "the brains of the war on the Indian side". He was captured in the Swamp fight and brought to Stonington, where he was tried and put to death. His bearing in confinement was worthy the best traditions of Indian dignity and stoicism.]

Banner—"King Philip's War."

SECTION V

CAPTAIN KIDD IN STONINGTON

[William Kidd, famous in the annals of piracy, was born in Scotland, probably at Greenock, about 1675-1701. He is supposed to have been the son of a worthy Covenanting minister. Young Kidd went to sea as a lad, privateered against the French and won a high reputation for stubborn courage. In 1691 the council of New York city awarded him 150 pounds for his services. In 1696 he was put in command of a ship with orders to seize the pirates that infested the Eastern Seas, and in 1697 reached Madagascar. In 1698-99 reports came that Kidd himself was playing the game of pirate. He was finally arrested in Boston and sent to England, where he was tried for piracy and the murder of one of his men, found guilty on the latter charge and hanged (at London) in 1701, protesting his innocence to the last. Kidd often sailed in these waters. A store of his buried treasure was found on Gardiner's Island and there is a tradition that he concealed other treasure on the shore of Lambert's Cove in Stonington. He was an occasional visitor on friendly terms in this town.]

SECTION VI

THE COLONIAL PERIOD

[Life was not all difficulty and struggle in Colonial New England. There were neighborhood jollities, "training days," quilting bees, tea-drinkings, husking bees and dancing parties. The dances of the time suggest those of the present period—by their unlikeness. It is a long distance from the minuet and gavotte of the eighteenth century to the tango and maxixe of the twentieth.]

SECTION VII

THE REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD.

[Stonington bore its full part in the Revolutionary War, as well as in the Second War with England. On August 30, 1775, it repelled an attack by the British frigate Rose, a 20-gun ship which had been harrying the southern coast of New England in search of food for the British garrison besieged in Boston. Captain Sir James Wallace of the Rose learned that the people of Block Island had sent their cattle to Stonington for safe keeping. Accordingly he attempted to land here, but the "Long Point" patriots, armed with muskets only, refused to let him come ashore. Captain Oliver Smith gathered his Long Point musketeers and Captain William Stanton hurried down from the Road district with his company of militia. The defenders assembled in the Robinson pasture, about where the residence of Mrs. Courtlandt G. Babcock now stands, just north of Wadawanuck square. From there they marched to Brown's wharf, and kept back the small boats sent from the frigate. The tenders were driven off to the Rose with heavy losses. Captain Wallace thereupon began to bombard the place. The firing was maintained for several hours and nearly every house was damaged. But only one man on shore was wounded—Jonathan Weaver, Jr., a musician in Captain Smith's command, who received from the next General Assembly a grant of 12 pounds, four shillings and fourpence.]

SECTION VIII

WHALING AND SEALING DAYS

[Whaling and sealing were carried on by Stonington vessels from early times. In the middle years of the nineteenth century the whaling interests of the port required many ships and represented a large investment. Fortunes were made in this industry. It was from an anchorage in the South Shetlands that a Stonington sealing squadron in 1821 desecrated the peaks of West Antarctica. In the Hero, a mere shallop of 45 tons, Captain Nathaniel B. Palmer of Stonington sailed to examine the region and find, if possible, new sealing grounds. The result was his discovery of the land afterward named Palmer Land in his honor, which was, until recently, the most southerly known territory on the globe. Captain Palmer has a rightful claim to be known as the discoverer of Antarctica.]

SECTION IX

WAR OF 1812

[On August 9, 1814, during the Second War with Great Britain, a hostile squadron under the command of Commodore Thomas Masterman Hardy made its appearance off Stonington. The vessels were the Ramilles, 74 guns; Pactolus, 14; Despatch, 22 and bombship Terror. The Nimrod, 30 guns, was afterward added to this formidable quartette. Commodore Hardy sent word ashore as follows: "Not wishing to destroy the unoffending inhabitants residing in the town of Stonington, one hour is given them from the receipt of this to remove out of the town". The place was made ready, nevertheless, for defence. Behind a four-foot breastwork near the present entrance to the inner breakwater three guns, (two 18-pounders and one 6-pounder), responded gallantly to the fire of the 160 English cannon. The attack lasted from the evening of the ninth to the twelfth of August, when the enemy sailed away, discomfited and crippled, having failed either to destroy the town or to effect a landing. The Despatch alone lost 21 killed and 50 wounded, and when she withdrew with the rest of the squadron was in a half-sinking condition. "It cost the King ten thousand pounds", wrote the balladist Philip Freneau, "to have a dash at Stonington". Two of the defenders were wounded, one of them so seriously that he afterward died. Many houses were struck, but none were destroyed.]

THE FLAG OF STONINGTON

Words by Henry R. Palmer Music by Alfred G. Chaffee

I

Where foams the blue Atlantic,
By rocky Napatree,
And twilight's friendly towers
Shine red and gold to sea,
Great Hardy of Trafalgar,
With all his ships in row,
Came flashing down to take the town
A hundred years ago.

CHORUS:

But in our smoking ramparts
Were daring men on guard,
And high above them fluttered
The striped flag and starred,
The flag of our affection
That still adorns the sky—
Where'er we be, on shore or sea,
We'll love it till we die.

II

Roared eighty guns to starboard.

Roared eighty guns to port,

And hid the starry standard

That flew above the fort.

But when the fight was finished.

It showed its colors fair.

The victor-tints the sunrise prints

Upon the morning air.

CHORUS:

For in our smoking ramparts

Were daring men on guard,

And high above them fluttered

The striped flag and starred.

The flag of our affection

That still adorns the sky—

Where'er we be, on shore or sea.

We'll love it till we die.

III

A hundred gracious summers

Have decked New England's shore,

And Britain's hostile squadrons

Go up and down no more,

The heroes, too, have vanished

Who held the coast of old.

But where they fought our hearts have wrought

Their victory in gold.

CHORUS:

And when our country summons

Her loyal sons on guard,

They'll rally round her banner,

The striped flag and starred,

The flag of our affection

That still adorns the sky—

Then three times three, where'er we be.

We'll love it till we die.
